TO OUR READERS.

It is with real pleasure that we again recur to the grateful task of paying our Acknowledgments to our numerous and judicious Subscribers and Correspondents. To the learning and talents of the latter, we sincerely ascribe the advantages, the interesting nature, and the increasing number of our Literary Communications. Our Readers may, however, assure themselves, that succession our part, instead of slackening, will rather tend to increase our vigilance and exertions; and that, to the utmost extent of the limits of our plan, nothing shall be wanting to perpetuate that diversity of information, variety, and entertainment, which must of course ensure the continuation of our claims upon the attention of a candid and generous Public.

Our Correspondent at Bombay, is entitled to our warmest Acknowledgments. His valuable Communications being enhanced by their transmission, from that distant quarter of the world, will be found occupying a conspicuous place in our present Number.

Memorials, and Inscriptions upon Sportsmen, from our intelligent and ingenious Correspondent, J. J. B. were deferred in our last by accident only. Every Communication of this kind, will ever meet with our first attention.

We hope to pay off the arrears with the Cricketing Department, in our next.

Extempore Lines, by our Bath Correspondent, on the Death of Mrs. Montagu, in our next.

The beautiful Print of Coach-Horses, given in the present Number, will be placed, by the Bookbinder, as the Frontispiece to the Volume.

THE SPORTING MAGAZINE,

Bombay Races.

To the Editors of the Sporting Magazine, London.

Gentlemen,

I HAVE now the pleasure to communicate to you the result of the third Bombay Races, which are inclosed. There is also a mistake to be corrected in the account of the Races, of last season, or second Bombay Races, viz.

In mentioning the time Silver Heels and King David run the second heat on the 15th of February, 1799, it is stated to be in two minutes thirty-five seconds, whereas it should be three minutes and twenty-five seconds. I have the honour to be, gentlemen, your most obedient servant, J. Hawkes, Clerk to the Bombay Turf Club.

Bombay, 24th January, 1800.

Sporting Intelligence.

December, 1799.

The third Bombay Races, which have afforded finer sport than ever, commenced on Monday the 9th instant, when the colts purse of 600 rupees, was run for, mile-and-half heats, weight for age; the result of which was as follows, viz.

Mr. Pearson's gr. colt, Bulkshee, four years old	1	1
Mr. Lovett's gr. colt, Dum Dum, three years and half old	2	2
Mr. Shubrick's ba. colt, Miniature, three years and half old	4	3
Mr. Humphrey's gr. colt, Hambletonian, four years old	5	4
Mr. Harding's ba. colt, Diamond, three years and half old	3	dr.
Mr. White's ba. colt, Menacer, four years old	dis.
Major Bell's ch. colt, Gay Deceiver, three years old	dis.
Mr. Beete's ba. colt, Comely, four years old	dr.
Mr. Broughton's gr. colt, Chance, four years and half old	dr.
Mr. Smith's gr. filley, Cleopatra, four years old	dr.

Diamond by much the favourite at starting, but was considerably over-weighted. Both heats were very well contested, and very close running between Bulkshee and Dum Dum, the last mile of the second heat.

Same day, Major Hawkes's ch. poney, Fizgig, beat Mr. Church's gr. poney, Small Hopes, 20 gold mohurs each; Small Hopes much the favourite, and had considerably the advantage at starting—a very good race.

Wednesday the 11th, the purse for all ages, 800 rupees, weight for age, was run for, two mile heats, as follows, viz

Mr. Richards's ba. colt, Legs, four years and half old	1	1
Mr. Grant's ba. h. Highlander, five years old	4	2
Major Hawkes's, ba. h. Speculator, aged	3	3
Mr. Harding's ba. h. Silver Heels, aged	2	4

Legs won easy: very close and hard running between the other three each heat: the knowing ones were completely taken in, Silver Heels being very much the favourite, and the bets before starting running high in his favour. Even betting he won, after the first heat.

Same day, Mr. Bellers's Young Mogul beat Mr. Gamble's Hazzard, for 300 rupees—a close race.

Friday 13th, the purse for aged horses only, 800 rupees, weight for inches, was run for, two mile heats, as follows, viz.

Mr. Harding's ba. horse, Silver Heels	4	1	1
Major Hawkes's gr. horse, King David	1	2	3
Mr. Grant's ba. h. Highlander	2	3	2
Mr. Richards's ba. h. Ajax	3	4	4
Mr. Smith's gr. h. Actoeon	dr.

Very fine sport and good running.—King David the favourite at starting, and Highlander the next. Even betting between them, and even betting King David against the field: high odds against Silver Heels. King David won the first heat easy, which was tolerably close run by the other three: at coming in, Silver Heels appeared completely knocked up. The odds, after the first heat, were two to one; and, in some parts of the course, a guinea to a rupee, King David won. In going off for the second heat, Silver Heels, by some means, got very considerably the start of all the others, and kept the lead for nearly the first mile, when King David pushed up to him, and a most interesting race took place for the remainder of the heat, neck and neck; sometimes one a few hands a head, sometimes the other, and a great part close a-breast—hard running, whip and spur. King David gained some advantage at the last turn, and it was supposed would have won; but Silver Heels again beat up his ground after passing the distance post, and won by half a length. Odds changed in favour of Silver Heels.

The third heat afforded great sport, and very fine running, between Silver Heels and Highlander: a hard and close push all the way round; and was won by Silver Heels by two or three lengths. The knowing ones were again taken in.

King David carried five pounds over his weight.

Same day, Major Bell's Gay Deceiver beat, at two heats, Mr. Daniel's Seagull.

N. B. Silver Heels getting the start so much for the second heat, was owing to Mr. Grant's Highlander, when the word to start was given, turning round against King David; by which they got entangled, and some time elapsed before they could get clear.

Second Meeting of the third Bombay Races.

On Monday the 13th January, 1800, the ladies purse of 500 rupees, was run for by horses of all ages, never having won a plate, purse, or sweepstakes; weight for age and inches. Heats, one mile and half. The result as follows, viz.

Mr. Grant's ba. h. Highlander, five years old	1	1
Major Hawkes's ba. h. Speculator, aged	4	2

Mr.

Mr. Hall's gr. h. Anvil, five years old	2	3
Mr. Manesty's wh. h. Mussaleem, aged	3	4

Mr. Harding's Diamond, Capt. Comyn's Doubtful, and Lieutenant Daniel's Paddy Whack, were drawn.

Highlander by much the favourite; after the fist heat, two to one he won.

A capital race for the second heat, between Highlander and Speculator, who ran him very hard all round.

On Wednesday the 15th of January, 1800, the Gentlemen's purse, or Whin's plate, 150 rupees each, open for twelve subscribers, (only nine subscribed,) weight for age and inches; heats, two miles, was run for by

Mr. Richards's ba. c. Legs, four years and half old	1	1
Mr. Harding's ba. h. Silver Heels, aged	2	2
Major Hawkes's gr. h. King David, aged	3	3

Mr. Smith's Actoeon, Captain Wilson's Morrick, and Mr. Humphries's Hambletonian, were drawn.

Tolerable good running; Legs was considerably the favourite: odds in his favour before starting, four to one. After the first heat, ten to one. Even betting between Silver Heels and King David, for the first heat.

On Friday the 17th January, 1800, the purse of 300 rupees, with a stake of three gold mohurs each, making 480 rupees, for the beaten horses of the season not having been distanced, weight for age; heats, one mile and half, was run for by

Major Hawkes's ba. h. Speculator	4	1	1
Mr. Hall's gr. h. Anvil	1	2	2
Mr Manesty's wh. h. Mussaleem	2	3	3
Major Hawkes's gr. h. King David	3	dr.

A very good race. David the favourite, and three to two in his favour at starting. The first heat was very closely run by Anvil and Mussaleem; the other two afforded good sport.

Same day, the Sweepstakes of 300 rupees, for galloways and ponies, was run for, one two-mile heat, weight for inches, by

Mr. William Crozier's ba. poney, Brush	1
Mr. Church's gr. poney, Putty	2
Mr. Shubrick's ba. gall. Miniature	3
Major Hawkes's ch. poney, Fizgig	4
Mr. Morley's ditto ch. gall. Nem Con	dis.

A very capital run heat, and very closely contested, between Brush and Putty. Miniature and Fizgig the favourites at starting: high odds in their favour.

What rendered this race extraordinary was, that on former occasions, Fizgig beat both Brush and Putty easy, and was himself beat by Miniature, whereas on the present, Miniature was beat hollow, and Fizgig nearly distanced.

Nem Con bolted, and threw his rider.

A Ball in the evening, which was numerously and splendidly attended, concluded the Sporting Seasons 1799—1800.

Mr.

Mr. Sturt's Misfortune and Deliverance.

THE following are the particulars of the miraculous escape of Mr. Sturt, of Brownsea Castle, near Poole, and Member of Parliament for Bridport; who having a sailing cutter at Weymouth, made a match to sail against Mr. Weld, of Lullworth Castle:—

"In setting off, the boat of Mr. Sturt's cutter being astern, he supposed it impeded her sailing, and on that occasion directed a boy to get into the boat, and convey her on shore. The child (the waves running high) refused—not only his boy, but all the crew declined this task; on which Mr. Sturt, with a deal of heroism, jumped into the boat, which he had no sooner done, than she drifted away; and in this perilous situation he was committed to the ocean. The boat had no sooner quitted sight of the cutter than she upset, and he was frequently washed off, and as frequently swam to the boat: he had even in this hour, resolution and presence of mind to undress himself, preparing for his fate as it grew near dark. When, fortunately for him, some transports which lay off, and had on board the 85th regiment, by contrary winds were put back; and the last vessel, which was three miles distance, saw a fellow creature in distress; and though three miles to windward, yet they had the courage to make up to him, which was an event of Divine Providence, as they, by their glasses, could only discern him, nor did they see him till they were within a few yards. They then lifted him into their boat, when the hero of this narration, who had, with an uncommon degree of resolution conducted himself on this trying occasion, impulsed by sensibility, burst into a flood of tears, grasping with fervour his deliverers.—It was near seven o'clock when they took him up; a few moments longer would have fatally closed the scene."

Mr. Sturt some few years since, by his intrepidity, saved the lives of four sailors, who would otherwise have perished; they were shipwrecked near his seat at Brownsea Castle, within a short distance of Poole, and were clinging to the wreck. In this perilous situation he offered ONE HUNDRED GUINEAS to any person who would attempt their deliverance. The sea then running mountains high, and death appearing engulphed in every wave, every one declined, when he, with an intrepidity unparalleled, jumped into his boat: this encouraged the rest; they ventured, and by these means the lives of those brave men were saved.

The singularity of this event is the more remarkable. He saved four sailors, and in his late preservation he was saved also by four sailors from the Middleton, a transport then in the roads.

The intrepidity of Mr. Sturt, and the firmness of his resolution, cannot be better exemplified, than in recording that in the time of his greatest danger and distress, he wrote with a pencil his name and address, and put it into his watch case, which he preserved by fastening it to his trowsers, the only covering he had, and which watch he was desirous to keep, being a present from his Lady.

He is reckoned the first Gentleman swimmer in England. By these means, and a considerable degree of resolution, he preserved a life valuable to society. He was between three and four hours at the mercy of the ocean. While Mr. Sturt was in this perilous situation, he had the presence of mind to undress himself, and pull off all his cloaths: he was taken up with only his nankeen trowsers and stockings. It is but justice due to his liberality to to say, that he most bountifully rewarded his deliverers with a dinner and ten guineas each.

The Father of the Turf.

OLD Vernon, the Father of the Turf, has at last reached his final goal. He died at Newmarket on Tuesday the 16th of September instant. Vernon was distinguished as a sporting man for upwards of fifty years, and departed this life in the 85th year of his age. He married Lord Ossory's mother, by whom he had three daughters, viz. the present Lady Warwick, Mrs. Smith, and one unmarried. To Mr. Vernon, the Duke of Bedford is said to have been much indebted for that knowledge of the sporting world which has enabled him to speak the language of defiance to the most dextrous on the turf.

Pedigree and Performances of Saltram.

HE was bred by Mr. Parkes, and foaled in 1780. Got by Eclipse, out of Virago, by Snap; her dam by Regulus, out of a sister to Black and all Black, by Crab, out of Miss Slamerkin, by True Blue, Lord Oxford's dun Arabian, D'Arcy, Black-legg'd Royal Mare. Virago also bred Termagant, Buskin, Speranza, Maria, Annette, Brunswick, &c. &c. &c.

In 1783, at Newmarket Craven Meeting, a Sweepstakes of [illegible]gs each h. ft. Across the Flat, 8st. each, (3 subscribers) was won by Mr. Parker's Saltram, beating Mr. Douglas's colt, by Justice, out of the dam of Ceres—2 to 1 on Saltram.

At Epsom Spring Meeting, Saltram won the Derby Stakes of [illegible]gs each, h. ft. by 3 yr old colts, 8st. fillies, 7st. 11lb. The last mile, (34 subscribers) beating Dungannon, Parlington, Gonzales, Volunteer, and another colt—5 to 2 agst Saltram.

In 1784, at Newmarket First Spring Meeting, Lord Boringdon's Saltram, beat Lord Foley's Oliver, 8st. each, P. M. 100gs—5 to 4 on Saltram.

In 1785, a Sweepstakes of 200gs each, h. ft., Ab. M. (4 subscribers) was won by H. R. H the Prince of Wales's Saltram, 8st. 6lb. beating Ld Clermont's Cantator, 7st. 2lb.—Even betting.

He was afterwards a Stallion, and was sire of Clytus, Coal Merchant, General, Royalist, Tear Coat, Peeping Tom, Septem, Coiner, Sweeper, Whip, Oscar, St. Paul, &c. &c. He was afterwards sold into Russia.

Racing at Maidenhead Thicket.

ON Monday, the 22d, was run over Maidenhead Thicket, the announced Sweepstakes, by horses of all ages and qualifications, the best of three three-mile heats. Rode by gentlemen.

E. Corbet, Esq.'s c. m. Bona Roba, 4 yrs old -	1	1	2	dr
Mr. Spencer (or Mr. Burgh's) Tunbridge, aged	2	2	1	1
T. Smith, Esq.'s br. h. Milksop	dr

The above race displayed, perhaps, more of the caprice (or versatility)

satility) of fortune, than any we ever had opportunity to report. The weight Bona Roba had to carry, as a four-years old, being only eight stone ten pounds, no gentleman could be found to ride so light; when Mr. Smith (who exceeded the weight by two stone) made the most liberal and disinterested offer of paying forfeit, and drawing his own horse, sooner than the mare should be excluded for want of a rider: this truly polite and generous offer being acceded to, they started for the first heat, and although the mare had travelled two hundred miles within the week, she beat Tunbridge the heat with ease; but as gentlemen riders do not always look far before them, they both accidentally ran on the wrong side a single post, and it was, according to the rules of the Jockey Club, deemed no heat. The second heat was run in a stile beyond description, and won by Bona Roba also, when the owner, or owners of Tunbridge, absolutely held a consultation, and had nearly concluded to draw, but at length declaring "their determination to proceed," a military gentleman kindly (but unfortunately!) made an offer to ride the mare, upon an ill-founded supposition that he rode lighter than Mr. Smith: the result was truly unlucky, for by some inexplicable dilemma, the new rider lost full forty yards at starting, and Tunbridge, running the whole three miles at score, the mare could never recover it till the last half mile, in which, by very powerful exertions, she so exceeded Tunbridge in speed, that the heat was lost by a length only; when, in consequence of the mare's having no alternative but to carry two stone more than her weight, for a fourth heat, she was drawn—immediately purchased by Mr. Smith, and is now ready to run Tunbridge at their fixed (or any equitable) weights, from one to five hundred, so that a future contest may be expected.

The same day, the Subscription Bowl, by horses that had never started, or had a sweat, with an intent so to do, before the 10th of August, in the present year, carrying weight for inches. The best of three two-mile heats.

Mr. T. F. Burgh's b. m. Coriander —	1	1
Earl of Scarborough's b. g.	2	2
Mr. Howdelit's b. g. Damon	3	3
Mr. Taplin's Portia, by Prospect — —	4	dr
E. Corbet, Esq.'s ch. m. Bellona —	5	4
T. Smith, Esq.'s b. m. Roso	dis.
M. C. Burgh's b. m. Volatile	dis.

Objections, previous to starting, had arisen to the qualifications of the winning mare, in consequence of her having been at a training stable more than five weeks; but that the sport might not be retarded, or the unanimity destroyed, it was the wish of Lord Scarborough that the "protest of disqualification" might be given up; to which the subscribers immediately acceded; and his Lordship, in direct opposition to the fashionable sporting finesse, giving orders to his rider "to run every inch of the ground," produced two as honest and well disputed heats as ever were run over any course in the kingdom.

THE FEMALE RUNNING MATCH.

THEATRICALS.

ACCOUNT of THE POINT OF HONOUR.

THIS new piece, translated from the French of Mercier, by Mr. C. Kemble, was performed, for the first time, at the Theatre in the Haymarket, on the 15th of July. The following are the principal Dramatis Personæ :—

Sir Franc (an old Major)	Mr. Barrymore.
Valcour (a young Officer)	Mr. Fawcett.
Durimel (the Deserter)	Mr. C. Kemble
Steinberg - -	Mr. Suett.
Mrs. Melfort (mother to Bertha) -	Miss Chapman
Bertha (wife of Durimel)	Miss De Camp.

(The Scene lies in Germany, at that time the seat of war.)

It is a very close copy of the original, and abounds in sentiments of pathos and feeling. The story is short and simple—

A young Officer, being ill treated by his Colonel, is impelled by passion to strike his superior; in consequence of which he deserts, in order to save his forfeited life. After passing some years in private, he is at length treacherously discovered, and being given up to his regiment for punishment, in which his father is at this critical juncture a Major, the execution of the death warrant is entrusted to the distracted parent. The Colonel's son devises a scheme by which the young man might effect his escape, and the Major exhorts him to avail himself of the opportunity; but he disdains to exist at the expence of his father's honour. Here an interesting conflict, of a sense of honour, with the impulse of Nature, takes place. The former for the time prevails, and this circumstance gives title to the piece. The young man is brought out for execution, and the father, after a severe struggle with his feelings, consents to give the fatal order, but at the same instant suddenly throws himself before his son, in order to receive the fire. The old man faints; the soldiers recover their arms; the destined victim breaks the cords by which he is tied to the halberts, and flies to the support of his father. Another officer (the Colonel's son) who is present, and who, without knowing the close affinity of the parties, had before interested himself greatly on the occasion, runs immediately to the Commandant, and obtains a pardon for the youth, who is thus restored to an overjoyed parent, and an affectionate wife, reduced to a state of frenzy pending his long-suspended fate.

The incidents of this piece, although but little forced, are by no means pleasing; and the interest which might otherwise be felt, is almost totally lost in the horror and disgust which is felt at the shocking situations which occasionally arise out of the painful nature of the story. The scene of the halberts, to which the young man is tied up, with a white handkerchief across his eyes, in momentary expectation of being relieved by death from so ignominious a condition, is scarcely to be tolerated on an English stage; and yet our distressed feelings continue, for several minutes, to be tortured with this frightful spectacle, which, if exhibited at all, should be only for a single moment. On the whole, we are far from considering the subject as a proper one for our drama; although we are of opinion that, with some few alterations, it may become attractive, and, of course, productive to the funds of the Theatre.

What a Blunder!

A new Opera, the avowed production of Mr. Holman, author of the Votary of Wealth, and Abroad and at Home, was performed on the 15th of August, at the Theatre in the Haymarket. It is called, What a Blunder! The Dramatis Personæ are as follow:

Dashington -	Mr. Fawcett.
Sturdy O'Tremor -	Mr. Johnstone.
Count Alphonso d'Esparza -	Mr. Holman.
Don Miguel de Lara -	Mr. Suett.
Lopez - -	Mr. Farley.
Juan - -	Mr. Emery.
Patrick - -	Mr. Chippendale.
Captain of the Banditti,	Mr. Sawyer.
Angelina - -	Miss De Camp.
Leonora - -	Miss Mountain.
Jaquelina - -	Miss Wheatly.
Viletta - -	Miss Menage.

The scene is laid at Valencia, in Spain; and to sustain the character of that "flame-loving" nation, as it is termed, there are two love intrigues—and, with these, a jealous husband and a separated wife.—Dashington, an English officer, by assisting his friend, Sir Sturdy O'Tremor, to get his enamorata out of a convent, gets into the prison of the Inquisition. He is released from thence by a gang of robbers, who have a subterraneous cave, like that described by our old friend Gil Blas, and which adjoins the dungeon of the Grand Inquisitor. After a variety of hair-breadth escapes, the jealous husband, Alphonso, finds that his wife is innocent, and that the blunder which had occasioned his retreat from social life, and his abandonment of Angelina, originated with Dashington, who was in love with her sister Leonora, and who mistook the latter for the mistress of the mansion. He is reconciled of course, and the other parties are united. The character of Sir Sturdy O'Tremor, an Irishman, in the plethora of health, but who fancies that he is dying of a consumption is, we apprehend, a scenic novelty; as is that of Don Miguel, who is a humane Inquisitor. Suett, who played this character, gave a blunder beyond what was announced in the bills, in saying, that he should not relinquish this invidious office, lest his predecessor, who was to follow him, should be guilty of greater severities!

The piece is in general of a sombre cast, but there are several scenes of much pleasantry; and the dialogue, on the whole, is pregnant and pointed. Holman, who played the part of Alphonso, in consequence of the accident that happened to Mr. C. Kemble, acted with much feeling and energy, and the other parts were very respectably sustained.—In the Music, we confess that we felt some abatement of our expectations; it was sufficiently appropriate, but it had very few traits of originality. A Bravura song, by Mrs. Mountain, was very deservedly encored; and Miss De Camp had one melody well adapted to her voice. Miss Wheatly, who appeared on this stage for the first time, sung with feeling and expression; but in her last song she produced some tones, which, to a critical ear, were by no means acceptable.—The Music is composed by Mr. Davy, of Exeter.

The piece was given out for repetition with an unanimous assent.

The Review.

A new Musical Entertainment, entitled The Review, was performed on the 1st instant, at the Theatre, in the Haymarket, and received with uniform and unbounded applause. The late camp at Windsor furnishes the groundwork of this little piece, the nature of which is almost sufficiently marked by the title.

A young

A young officer is in love with a Quaker, who agrees to elope with him; they of course constitute the hero and heroine of the plot, the interest of which arises from the obstacle thrown in their way by the blundering stupidity of their respective servants, who deliver the letters of assignation to the Lady's guardian. This incident is, however, so artfully managed, as eventually to facilitate the very purpose to which it is apparently a bar; and thus the denouement is completely hid, until the moment when it takes place. There is also a subordinate pair of lovers in the persons of a soldier and his mistress, who follows him to the camp in male attire. These characters are all necessarily connected with the subject; and the story is precisely what the name of a camp suggests. The fable may, therefore, be considered as skilfully conducted, and all the unities well preserved; but these constitute a very inconsiderable part of its excellence. A vein of sprightly humour pervades every scene; and though in a few instances it borders on double entendre rather indelicate, and in some places flows too broad, its general character is natural and luxuriant. The two servants constitute the principal medium of its conveyance, the one an Irishman, the other an Englishman; they are an admirable pair of portraits, drawn with all their national features and distinctions, richly coloured. It is upon their embellishment the author has most exerted his strength, and to them he is most indebted for its success. Among the eccentricities, a parish clerk (a jack-of-all trades) is also introduced; but the character is too familiar to the stage to excite the degree of interest to which its merit is entitled. By this great variety judiciously combined, the stage constantly presents a succession of interesting, lively, and strongly-contrasted scenes, except one or two in the last act, which want a little compression.

The piece has also all the advantages of beautiful scenery and music. The latter, composed by Dr. Arnold, abounds with variety, and is appropriate to the subject.

Almost every song was encored with loud and reiterated plaudits. Those which fell to the lot of Mrs. Mountain were marked with most animated approbation. Of the scenes every one was entitled to praise. The most conspicuous, however, were the view of Windsor, and the Review, which closed the piece. In the latter, the powers of mechanism were introduced in aid of colouring, and with the happiest effect. The troops are seen marching and counter-marching, forming in line, and going through various evolutions with precision.

Few pieces have ever gone off with more eclat, or have been announced for future representation with louder plaudits.

SONG, by FAWCETT, in the Character of QUOTEM, in the new Farce of The Review; or, The Wags of Windsor.

I'm parish-clerk and sexton here;
My name is Caleb Quotem:—
I'm painter, glazier, auctioneer:
In short, I am Factorum.
I make a watch—I mend the pumps;
For plumber's works my knack is:
I physic sell—I cure the mumps;
I tombstones cut—I cut the rumps
Of little school-boy Jackies.
Geography is my delight;
Ballads—epitaphs I write;
Almanacks I can indite;
Graves I dig, compact and tight.
At dusk by the fire, like a good jolly cock,
When my day's work is done, and all over—
I tipple, I smoke, and I wind up the clock,
With my sweet Mrs. Quotem, in clover.

With my amen, gaymen,
Rum Quotem,
Factotum;
Putty and lead;

Stumps, mumps,
Bumps, rumps,
Mortar he thumps;
Jogging, flogging,
Signy-post daubery,
Split-crow, or strawberry,
Chimery, rhimery
Liquorish, stickorish,
Chizzle comb,
Frizzle tomb.
Going! a-going!
Squills,
Pills,
Song inditing,

Camberwell Fair.

On Saturday, August 23, this annual scene of fun, festivity, debauchery, plunder and riot, commenced, and Wednesday, Sept. 3, was the grand Apron Fair.

The cracked trumpets, hurdy-gurdies, and screech-owl grinding organs, formed a most solemn and delectably harmonious concert, highly enriched with the stop diapason of the roaring of Pidcock's wild beasteses. But our old Bartholomew Fair acquaintance, Swords, surnamed Mouth Almighty, beat them all hollow. He was Cryer to a Thespian Booth, where Pizzificarro was enacted by the first Enactors from Doory-lane and Common-garden's original Booths.—Mouth Almighty had like to have ruined all the other houses. His bellowing was so harmonious, and his tremendous vortex so wide, that every lad and lass of true Saltpetre Bank and St. Giles's politeness flocked thither: he at last chucked halfpenny rolls down his throat as easy as a stork could swallow a gudgeon. After a triumph of an hour, the cry was, a fight, a fight, a fight! between Boney, the goat, and Mulish Billy. All was immediately helter-skelter. Tumble-down Dick, fried oysters, flummery, cockle-shell pie, and vinegar punch, tumbled before the mob, to see this desperate fight (for desperate it was). Behold, when the nymphs and swains had formed a ring, out came a very stately and tall Corsican Goat, with four large antlers and several buds. The stateliness of the animal, his quick eye, and firm step, engaged their attention. The Welsh, Irish, and Cornish lads immediately cried aloud, "Five glasses of Royal to three upon Boney, fight what he will." Immediately out came a fine sleek Morocco Mule, who pawed the ground, and turned round in contempt. The goat took an outlandish leap over his back, and faced him in a twinkling. The cry was ten to three upon Boney, and very few betts for Muley. The fight began amidst a dreadful yell of partisans. Muley reared himself up, and made a dreadful Hudibrastic plunge, but Boney caught his feet upon his upper crooked horns, and ran one of his under sharp ones into his enemy's gullet. After a sharp struggle, Muley was thrown upon his back, where he lay kicking.

In the mean time, some drunken butchers had let loose two mastiffs and a bull-dog, to pin him, (a loud cry, unfair, unfair!) but the master was aware of the scheme, and had placed a ladder against his booth. Boney, the goat, ran up the ladder swifter than Astley's Balance Master, and laughed at his adversaries: but he presently saw an opportunity, when all three were yelping at their enemy, which they could not reach, and down dashed Boney headlong upon his horns, and shivered the three dogs heads in a moment.

ment. A ring was again made, and Muley being recovered, was brought to face him; but seeing the brains of the blood-hounds upon the goats horns, he turned tail, ran away, and at last brayed in a most woeful manner.

The scene was now all confusion and riot, and every person boasted of the Corsican goat. Ten thousand bumpers of gin were drank to his success.

Contrast between Ancient and Modern Bartholomew Fair.

"ON Bartholomew Eve, (says a Correspondent) the Aldermen met the Lord Mayor at Guildhall Chapel; and, after prayers, they took their horses and rode to Newgate, drank a cool tankard, and then rode to Cloth-fair and opened it. They returned to the Lord Mayor's house through Aldersgate. [Properly speaking, then, the Fair should have been opened on Tuesday afternoon.]

" On the Fair-day, the Aldermen and Sheriffs dined with his Lordship in their scarlet gowns, and afterwards rode to see the wrestling, distributing prizes according to merit; and then again returned to the Mayor's house.

" On the second day, his Lordship and several Aldermen again attended to view the tilting, the shooting with the cross bow, and throwing the lance at targets, in all which exercises the London young men were very expert, and could at that time have challenged all Europe.

" The third day the apron fair was dedicated to the young women, some of the boldest of whom ran races in close jackets. Those who were diffident and industrious had small stands, where they sold laces and mittings of their own weaving and knitting during their leisure hours in the preceding year. They had also worked neckerchiefs, ruffs, and frills. The company always encouraged the neatest workwoman; and on this day the Lady Mayoress and the ladies visited the fair, encouraging and rewarding the young women. It was looked upon a high honour to sell their work to her Ladyship.

" The last day was for the apprentices and boys, who were indulged in every kind of juvenile fun and amusement until eight in the evening, when the whole was stopped, and the ground cleared "

Note by the Editor.—Thus it appears that what was at first intended as an encouragement to trade and industry, has degenerated into a seed-plot for idleness and criminal indulgencies — Nothing material to commerce is there disposed of excepting a few toys:— On the other hand, excess of drinking, and the carron sold under the name of sausages, &c. tend to injure the health of hundreds; besides, every considerate person must know that the low-priced shews in this great city, gives the vicious and designing an opportunity of inveigling female virtue and inexperience, and too many of the other sex may date their ruin from the annual return of the modern Bartholomew Fair.

Somerset Assizes.

(Action brought against Barking Dogs.)

ON the Nisi Prius side, the attention of the public and of the court had been in no ordinary degree excited, and was very considerably gratified by an action of the Rev. Thomas Street, of Lyncombe, near the city of Bath; against G. H Tugwell, esq; banker, who has a house in that village contiguous to the habitation of of Mr. S. and who keeps sporting dogs, the barking of which was alledged to be a serious and intolerable nuisance. Mr. Bond opened the case very strongly, and made a great impression on the whole court. The first witness called was a man servant of the plaintiff, a hale robust fellow, on whom Mr. Gibbs, in his cross-examination, prevailed to own himself in a very ailing state of health, on account of the nightly disturbance of his repose by the clamour of the said dogs. The gravity produced by Mr. Bond's opening speech began now to vanish, and the cause to wear a very entertaining appearance; three or four other witnesses were examined on the part of the prosecution, and an offer of terminating the dispute by reference, conformably to the wishes of the Judge himself, (who thought it a pity that two neighbouring country gentlemen could not settle their differences without recurring to law) having been made by the defendant's counsel, and rejected by the plaintiff's, Mr. Gibbs arose, and in behalf of the defendant addressed a speech to the jury (which was special) so replete with wit, humour, and irony, that he completely put to flight all the serious impressions that remained on the minds of the auditors, and kept jury, counsel, witnesses, attornies, and hearers of all descriptions, including the very plaintiff himself, in a roar of laughter for upwards of three quarters of an hour. It would be difficult to do justice on paper to this admirable effusion; neither, considering that it is hoped the parties will in future live peaceably in the same neighbourhood, would it be proper to detail it. The plaintiff appeared to enjoy, with great good-humour, the facetiousness of his opponent's counsel, and even received from him many compliments on the apparent complacency of his own disposition. Nor was his good humour ruffled, when Mr. G. concluded, by recommending Mr. Tugwell to shoot two or three brace of partridges on the approaching 1st of September, to send them to Mr. Street's family, and by all means to let the first witness in the cause have the bread sauce; whose constitution evidently required to be cherished by pap and panada!—The learned Judge, Sir Alexander Thompson, having with great clearness and impartiality summed up the evidence, the jury, after a short deliberation, delivered a verdict for the defendant; at the same time recommending to him, that he would take measures to relieve Mr. Street's family from the alledged nuisance, to which proposal Mr. Tugwell declared that he would pay the most implicit attention, as far as might be consistent with his own convenience.

Chelmsford Assize.

Wing v. Wilson.

THIS was an action for recovering the price of an unsound gelding, purchased by the plaintiff of defendant, and warranted sound.

Mr. Garrow stated, that the plaintiff brought this action for the recovery of the sum of fourteen guineas, being the price paid for the horse in question, which was warranted sound to plaintiff, that the horse before he reached four miles distance from Horncastle fair, where he was purchased, fell lame; in consequence of which, the plaintiff was obliged to stop on the road, and sent after defendant the following morning in order to return the horse, but defendant was gone from the place to which he sent the horse, and plaintiff was therefore necessitated to take it home; on his way to which place, it fell down and broke broke its knees. About four days afterwards, plaintiff arrived home; he informed the defendant by letter, of the unsoundness of the horse, but did not state to him the nature of the accident the horse had met with; in answer to which, he was requested, in a letter by defendant, to take the horse to Stirbich fair in the following week, and he, the defendant, would take it back and return the purchase money; to which place the horse was taken; but on defendant's discovering that the horse's knees had been broken, he refused to take it, or return plaintiff the purchase money.

It being clearly established by the evidence on the part of the plaintiff, that the horse was lame and unsound previous to it falling down, the jury without hesitation, found a verdict for plaintiff, for 14l. 14s.

MOSELY V. SESSION.

This was another horse action, to recover the price of a horse which the defendant had warranted free from vice.

The price of the horse was 40l. and it was clearly proved that defendant warranted him sound, gentle, and quiet, as any horse in England. It appeared, in evidence, that the horse was so restive and unruly, that no man who had not been used to horses all his life, could ride him.

Verdict for plaintiff.

POST-HORSE DUTY.

A CAUSE of great importance to licenced post-masters, was tried before Lord Kenyon, at the late Maidstone assizes, between Mr. Scott, farmer of the said duties for Kent and Sussex, and a licenced Post-master at Canterbury, to recovery sundry penalties for various frauds, and non-entry of duty in his stamp-office weekly account; when, after a short trial, the facts being fully proved, Lord Kenyon expressed his great abhorrence of the constant practice of frauds of this kind, and a verdict was entered against the defendant for three penalties of fifty pounds each, with full costs of suit.

RENCONTRE BETWEEN A GENTLEMAN AND A PORTER,

WHICH took place a few days since, near the bottom of the Haymarket, between Colonel Hanger and a porter belonging to an inn in Piccadilly; (the three Kings) the cause of which was this: the porter was carrying on his shoulder a racoon; when suddenly the animal, either displeased with his situation, or actuated by a momentary ferocious impulse, bit the man's ear through, who immediately dashed his ungrateful burthen on the ground. Colonel Hanger, who was a witness to the transaction, immediately went up, and asked the man, what he meant by thus barbarously using the animal? The porter, still smarting from the effects of the racoon's teeth, and little inclined to enter into an explanation, answered, "What's that to you; you d—d s———!!" Hanger, enraged by the application of the epithet, thrust the end of his well known baton into the pit of his adversarys' stomach: at this moment the battle became serious—furious at this second aggression, the muscular porter rushes on the Colonel à la Mendoza, who, perhaps, somewhat intimidated by his bulk and furious appearance, retreats (facing the enemy) down the Haymarket, and into Pall-Mall, defending himself with his cudgel, and keeping his adversary at bay, by observing the Saint George's Guard; luckily, just as the Colonel had retreated nearly to the gates of Carleton House (in which citadel, it it is supposed, by the line of his retreat, he meant to take refuge,) a party of gentlemen came up, and rescued the Colonel from the fury of his sturdy opponent.

Extraordinary Activity.

IN the village of Ditcheat, four miles from Shepton-Mallet, Somersetshire, in the year 1765, a woman of the name of Kingston, was delivered of a stout boy, without arms or shoulders. He possesses, without the usual appendages of arms, all the strength, power, and dexterity of the ablest and most regularly-made men, and exercises every function of life. He feeds, dresses, and undresses himself, combs his own hair, shaves his beard with the razor in his toes, cleans his shoes, lights his fire, writes out his own bills and accounts, and does almost every other domestic business. Being a farmer by occupation, he performs the usual business of the field, fodders his cattle, makes his ricks, cuts his hay, catches his horse, and saddles and bridles him with his feet and toes. He can lift ten pecks of beans with his teeth; with his feet throws a large sledge hammer farther than other men can with their arms; and he has even fought a stout battle, and come off victorious. In 1789, he married a young woman. These facts are notorious in most parts of Somersetshire.

A Raw-Flesh Eater.

CHARLES DOMERY, a native of Benche, on the frontiers of Poland, aged 21, was brought to the prison of Liverpool, 1799, having been a soldier in the French service on board the Hoche, captured by the squadron under the command of Sir J. B. Warren, off Ireland.

He is one of the nine brothers, who, with their father, have been remarkable for the voraciousness of their appetites. They were all placed early in the army; and the peculiar craving for food with this young man began at thirteen years of age.

He was allowed two rations in the army, and by his earning or the indulgence of his comrades, procured an additional supply.

When in the camp, if bread or meat were scarce, he made up the deficiency by eating four or five pounds of grass daily; and in one year devoured 174 cats, (not their skins) dead or alive; and says, he had several severe conflicts in the act of destroying them, by feeling the effects of their talons on his face and hands; sometimes he killed them before eating, but when very hungry, did not wait to perform this humane office.

Dogs and rats equally suffered from his merciless jaws; and if much pinched by famine, the entrails of animals, indiscriminately, became his prey. The above facts are attested by Picard, a respectable man, who was his comrade in the same regiment on board the Hoche, and is now present; and who assures me, he has often seen him feed on those animals.

When the ship, on board of which he was, had surrendered after an obstinate action, finding himself, as usual, hungry, and nothing else in his way but a man's leg, which was shot off, lying before him, he attacked it greedily, and was feeding heartily, when a sailor snatched it from him, and threw it over-board.

Since he came to this prison, he has eaten one dead cat and about twenty rats. But what he delights most in, is raw meat, beef, or mutton, of which, though plentifully supplied by eating the rations of ten men men daily, he complains he has not the same quantity, nor indulged in eating so much as he used to do, when in France.

He often devours a bullock's liver, raw, three pounds of candles, and a few pounds of raw beef, in one day, without tasting bread or vegetables, washing it down with water, if his allowance of beer is expended.

His subsistence at present, independent of his own rations, arises from the generosity of the prisoners, who give him a share of their allowance. Nor is the stomach confined to meat, for when in the hospital, where some of the patients refused to take their medicines, Domery had no objection to perform this for them; and his stomach never rejected any thing, as he never vomits, whatever be the contents, or however large.

Wishing fairly to try how much he actually could eat in one day; on the 7th of September 1799, at four o'clock in the morning, he breakfasted on four pounds of raw cow's udder; at half past nine, in presence of Dr. Johnson, Commissioner of sick and wounded seamen, Admiral Child and his son, Mr. Forster, agent for the prisoners, and several respectable gentlemen, he exhibited his powers as follows:—there was set before him five pounds of raw beef, and twelve tallow candles of 1lb. weight, and one bottle of porter; these he finished by half past ten o'clock. At one o'clock there was again put before him five pounds of beef and one pound of candles, with three bottles of porter; at which time he was locked up in the room, and sentries placed at the windows to prevent his throwing away any of his provisions. At two o'clock, when I again saw him, with two friends, he had nearly finished the whole of the candles, and a great part of the beef, but had neither evacuated by vomiting, stool, or urine; his skin was cool, and pulse regular, and in good spirits. At a quarter past six, when he was to be returned to his prison, he had devoured the whole, and declared he could have eat more; but from the prisoners without telling him we wished to make some experiment on him, he began to be alarmed. It is also to be observed, that the day was hot, and not having his usual exercise in the yard, it may be presumed, he would have otherwise had a better appetite. On recapitulating the whole consumption of this day, it stands thus:

Raw cow's udder		4lb.
Raw beef	-	10
Candle	- -	2
Total	-	16lb. besides

five bottles of porter.

The eagerness with which he attacks his beef when his stomach is not gorged, resembles the voracity of a hungry wolf, tearing off and swallowing pieces with canine greediness. When his throat is dry from continued exercise, he lubricates it by stripping the grease off the candle between his teeth, which he generally finishes at three mouthfuls, and wrapping the wick like a ball, string and all, sends it after at a swallow. He can, when no choice is left, make shift to dine on immense quantities of raw potatoes, or turnips; but from choice, would never desire to taste bread or vegetables.

He is in every respect healthy, his tongue clean, and his eyes lively.

After he went to the prison, he danced, smoaked his pipe, and drank a bottle of porter; and by four next morning, he awoke with his usual ravenous appetite; which he quieted by a few pounds of raw beef.

He is six feet three inches high, pale complexion, grey eyes, long brown hair, well made, but thin, his countenance rather pleasant, and is good-tempered.

The Savage of Aveyron.

SOME months ago was mentioned in the public papers the finding of a boy in the woods of Aveyron. He arrived at Paris a few days ago, and is entrusted to the care of the ingenious Abbe Sicard, the master of the Deaf and Dumb School. The boy is said never to have uttered yet an articulate sound, nor even to express his most urgent wants. He makes a noise like a scream, and has some manual and physiognomical gestures; and what is astonishing is, that though he spent a month in the hospital of St. Afrique, where he was treated as a beggar taken up on the highway, and no observations made upon so singular a being, yet he has not made one step towards civilization, and is just as far removed from the manners and habits of social life as when he was first discovered in the woods. His form is good, his figure agreeable; he is above twelve years of age; he wears a large girdle, and is without shoes and stockings. He sits usually upon the ground, and sleeps upon it, and it is only through affection for his keeper, whom he appears to love, that he will sometimes sit on a chair, or sleep in the bed. The food he prefers is raw potatoes, which he devours with greediness; he is also very fond of nuts; meat is disagreeable to him, though he has been prevailed upon to take the wing of a fowl. White bread he will eat, but brown bread he detests. He appears to be sometimes affected at the care taken of him, and puts out his hand to those who caress him; but nothing can console him for the loss of his antient freedom, and his first mode of living. He is always anxious to run away. The greatest noise is made in his ears, but he does not appear to hear it: yet the slightest noise made in opening a door seems to awake in him his habitual thoughts and his constant wishes, and he turns round as if to get away. He appears also to hear the noise of nuts, when they are cracked near him. To all other sounds he is indifferent.

Singular Anecdote.

A FEW days before the Armistice, General Lecourbe, in order to effect a reconnoitring expedition, which he deemed of the utmost importance, invited a miller to dine with him, and plied him with bumpers of wine so rapidly, that it soon took effect, and the man took a sound sleep. In this situation four confidential subaltern officers, by order of their General, stripped the sleeper, attired him in an old uniform, and a laced hat, and carried him to an out-work some distance from the advanced guard. Lecourbe, on his side, dressed himself in the miller's cloathing, dusting himself as much as he was able, so as to be beyond the reach of discovery, and set out on his journey. On his return, as he was on the point of rejoining his troops, he met a small party of Austrian Hussars, whom he accosted, telling them, that a French General was in the neighbourhood fast asleep, whom they might easily take prisoner. The Hussars, eager for such a prize, followed Lecourbe to the spot where the miller lay asleep. The General led them thither slowly, in order to avoid suspicion; but, as soon as he had shewn them the road, he set off pretty rapidly. Having succeeded in the object of his reconnoitring, Lecourbe reached his head-quarters. — The surprise of the Austrians, when they learnt learnt from the Miller himself the affair, may be better imagined than expressed.

An ingenious MORALITY on CHESS, by POPE INNOCENT.

THIS world is nearly like a Chess-board, one point of which is white, the other black, because of the double state of life, and death, grace and sin. The familie of this Chess-board are like the men of this world: they all come out of one bag, and are placed in different stations in this world, and have different appellations. One is called King, another Queen, the third Rook, the fourth Knight, the fifth Alphin, the sixth Pawn.

The condition of the game is, that one takes another; and when the game is finished, as they all come out of one bag, they are put in the same place together. Neither is there any difference between the King and the poor Pawn; and it often happens that when one familie is thus put to rest in its bag, the King lies at the bottom, just as the great will find themselves in their transit from this world to Hell. In this game, the King goes and takes in all the circumjacent places in a direct line: a sign the King takes every thing justly, and that he must never omit doing justice to all uprightly; for in whatever manner a King acts, it is reputed just; and what pleases the Sovereign has the vigour of law. The Queen, whom we call Fers, goes and takes in an oblique line; because women, being an avaricious breed, (genus) whatever they take beyond their merit and grace, is rapine and injustice. The Rook is a judge, who perambulates the whole land in a straight line, and should not take any thing in an oblique manner by bribery and corruption, nor spare any one. Thus they verify the saying of Amos—"Ye have turned judgment into gall, and the fruit of righteousness into hemlock!"—But the Knight, in taking, goes one point directly, and then takes an oblique circuit; in sign that Knights and Lords of the Land may justly take the rents due to them, and their just fines, from those who have forfeited them, according to the exigence of the case. Their third point being obliquely, applies to them, so far as they extort subsidies and unjust exactions from their subjects.

The poor Pawn goes directly forward, in his simplicity; but whenever he will take, does so obliquely.—Thus man, while he rests satisfied with his poverty, lives in a direct line; but when he craves temporal honours, by means of lies, perjuries, favours, and adulation, he goes obliquely, till he reaches the superior degree of the chess-board of this world: then the Pawn changes to Fers, and is elevated to the rank of the point he reaches, just like poverty promoted to rank, fortune, and consequential insolence.

The Alphins are the various prelates of the church, Pope, Archbishop, and their subordinate Bishops, who rise to their sees not so much by divine inspiration, as by royal power, interest, entreaties, and ready money. These Alphins move and take obliquely three points; for almost every prelate's mind is perverted by love, hatred, or bribery, not to reprehend the guilty, or bark against the vicious, but rather to absolve them of their sins: so that those who should have extirpated vice, are, in consequence of their own covetousness, become promoters of vice, and advocates of the Devil.

In this chess-game, the Devil says "Check!" whenever he insults and strikes one with his dart of sin; and, if he that is struck cannot immediately deliver himself, the Devil, resuming the move, says to him, "Mate!" carrying his soul along with him to prison, from which neither love nor money can deliver him; for from Hell there is no redemption. And as Huntsmen have various hounds for taking various beasts, so the Devil and the World have different vices, which differently entangle mankind; for all that is in this world, is either lust of the flesh, lust of the eyes, or proud living.

SWAN-CATCHING; and an Account of a CHASE in the EASTERN STILE.

TIMUR BU, otherwise called Tamerlane, after his return from the conquest of Natolia, ordered a famous chase on the plains of Actam, a town of the province of Adirbeitzan, near the river Araxes, in which the utmost magnificence appeared. Cherefeddin Ali, who was contemporary with Timur, and in all probability among his attendants, says, "the dogs had coverings of sattin embroidered with gold, and the hunting leopards had chains of gold set with precious stones about their necks. There was an infinite number of Grecian greyhounds, so esteemed for their swiftness, as also a very uncommon and excellent kind of beagles; but what were most remarkable, were huge European mastiffs, as strong as the lions of Africa, as terrible as tigers roused up to fight, and as swift as arrows. After three days' the circle began to close, and the slaughter, which is called Camarmichi, was made upon an infinite number of wild beasts, as lions, antelopes, roe-bucks, as well of the mountains as of the plains, and also stags."

SWAN-CATCHING.

WHEN winter was come, Timur went to Bukhara, where he ordered several little houses to be built in form of a dome, for the Lords and Ladies of his court; and as there were here several fine ponds, in which were a vast number of all kinds of birds, and particularly swans, he resolved to divert himself with fowling. He encamped on the banks, and the officers built floats, on which they entered these ponds, and with great cries, and the noise of drums and kettle-drums, scared the birds, and constrained them to fly; and while they passed from one pond to another, the fowlers cried out to encourage them, but they could not escape the furious assault of the merciless Togrul, (a bird unknown in Europe) which is the strongest and most cunning of all the birds of prey: the drums likewise made them fearful, so that in a short time they caught them in vast numbers. These birds are here in so great plenty, that the author of the Mogul Annals, called Gehangucha, writes, that the princes Zagatai and Octai, sons of the great Genghiz Can, passed a whole winter in this sport in this country, from whence they sent every week fifty camels laden with swans, to be distributed in the general camp, which was without Samarcand: and this distribution of the birds is called by Tartars, Chirilga.

DEFECTIVE

Defective State of Horse-Racing in France.

[Translated for the Sporting Magazine.]

MR. LONTOR, a writer in the Journal De Paris, observes, that at the same time the Government admit all possible magnificence in the races on the Champ De Mars, they should be careful to increase their utility.—Citizen Lontor asks, whether the price of a carbine inlaid with gold, worth one hundred and fifty thousand francs, might not be better employed in prizes for the best horses, instead of being awarded, as at present, to a carriage-driver. He also observes, that the Fifty and Hundred Pound Prizes given by the English, in several parts of this country, have much improved the breed; while, notwithstanding the prizes given in France are much higher, for want of others to run against them, at the late races near Paris, it was difficult to find two horses to run for the prize!

The writer then proposes the admission of horses of all countries to run for the high prizes given by the French: that the proprietors shall chuse whom he pleases to ride; and that, instead of the name of the winning jockey, the name of the horse and his pedigree shall be made public.—These regulations, he thinks, would stimulate the owners to purchase good horses, especially as they might obtain an indemnification in the prizes given; and he further assures us, that they would even make considerable sacrifices to obtain a good breed. "They might," he adds, "import English and other stallions; and then the French racers might rival every competitor!"

Hints for the Improvement of Racing in England.

THE effect of the Royal Purses and Plates has corresponded with their meritorious object—the increase of blood horses in these countries, which are now, perhaps, not inferior in this respect to any other in the world. But this, like most other things, is capable of improvement; and the present moment, when the subject has come under the eye of authority, is the best to bring it into fair discussion.

The great principle of the Sovereign, in encouraging the Turf, is the establishment of a breed of horses whose speed shall be as a medium of their service; but the Racing Calendar shews that speed constitutes the sole desideratum of the Turf, and that nineteen out of twenty of the horses now propagated for this purpose, are only capable of carrying a feather!

To correct this evil, it would be highly expedient, after a given period, to confine all Royal and other Public Plates, &c. for aged horses, to those which shall carry at least twelve stone; by which means we should, in a few years, have horses whose use need not, as at present, be confined to the Race-course or to the Park.

Archery.

ON Monday, August 25, the Woodmen of the Forest of Arden had their annual Grand Target meeting. After an admirable display of skill, the Earl of Aylesford was declared Captain of Numbers, and Thomas Palmer, Esq. Lieutenant His Lordship also obtained the Gold Medal, as best shot; and the Rev. John Dilke, Rector of Packington, the Silver Medal.

On

On Wednesday the 27th, the Silver Arrow was shot for at nine score yards, and the competition produced among the respective candidates a rare exhibition of talent. It was adjudged to the Rev. John Dilke.

On Friday the 29th, the Silver Bugle was shot for at ten and a half score yards, and won by Thomas Featherstone, Esq.

Notwithstanding the unfavourable state of the weather for the two first days, the meeting was numerously attended, and the attractions of this old English exercise were considerably increased by the presence of most of the Ladies of beauty and fashion in the country. A splendid ball was given at the Forest Hall on Wednesday and Friday evenings.

The fortunate Ladies in the Lottery were Miss Ayre, and Miss Catherine Mordaunt, daughter of Sir John Mordaunt. The former drew the Gold Arrow, and the latter the Gold Bugle.

Local Antipathy to the eating of Game, &c.

To the Editors of the Sporting Magazine.

Gentlemen,

If you ask a countryman in this part of the kingdom to dine, he objects to any kind of Game which comes to your table, and says, in his provincial dialect, "I'se never eats hollow fowl;" under which term he includes hares and rabbits, as well as wild fowl. It is in vain to enquire whence this dislike proceeds; for he can tell you no more, than that he derives it from his father.

Cæsar, it is very remarkable, describes the inhabitants of this country as having exactly the same prejudice. They esteemed it (says he) a crime to eat hares, poultry, or geese: they kept them, nevertheless, for amusement. Had the generality of our people been descendants of the Britons, whom Cæsar conquered, there would have been, then, little difficulty in accounting for this superstition, as it might reasonably be supposed to be the remains of a Druidical inhibition, continued to this time. But history allows of no such solution; for the Saxons found this island deserted by the Romans, and ravaged by the Picts, in such a state of desolation, that, so far from adopting the customs of the few surviving natives, they gave new names to the rivers and mountains, and even to the villages and cities.

There is, however, an abstinence from some of these animals, as to food, still more inexplicable. It is well known to Sportsmen, that spaniels refuse to eat the bones of pheasants, partridges, and wild fowl, though they hunt them naturally: they reject also the bones of the woodcock, which bird they must be trained to flush.

Some of your numerous readers, perhaps, may be able to account for this provincial dislike to game; and whether this antipathy in dogs is dictated by instinct, or arises from being domesticated.

It appears these elegant lines were written by the celebrated Somerville, the Poet, as a grateful tribute to the memory of James Boeter, his careful and steady huntsman, who received his death in the chase, by an inward hurt, of which he lingered three days.—It is singular, that this man's name, in Greek, points to his occupation in life, Βοητηρ*, viz. Clamator; and it is more singular still, if what we are told is true, that the author of "The Chase" should engage a servant to succeed Boeter, in this his favourite pursuit, of the name of Bawler.

In the chapel, south of the chancel of Wooton Wawen, the family of Somerville have been deposited for near two hundred years. On a marble slab is MEMORANDUMS OF SPORTSMEN, &c.

To the EDITORS of the SPORTING MAGAZINE.

GENTLEMEN,

BE pleased to rescue from oblivion a name nearly obliterated, by time, from a large tomb in the great church-yard, Coventry. Our hero is mentioned with honour in the 436th Spectator, by the name of Mr. Parke, of Coventry, in which paper is a fine description of the person and athletic accomplishments of his friend Serjeant Miller, who became a Captain in the army, and did notable service in Scotland, under the Duke of Cumberland, in the memorable year 1745.

J. J. B.

To the memory of
Mr. JOHN SPARKS,
A native of this city.
He was a man of a mild disposition,
A gladiator by profession,
Who, after having fought 350 battles
In the principal parts of Europe,
With honour and applause,
At length quitted the stage, sheathed his sword,
And, with Christian resignation,
Submitted to the Grand Victor,
In the 52d year of his age,
Anno Salutis 1733.

ON the 1st of August died, at Goodleigh, near Barnstaple, in his 80th year, Mr. Henry Stribling, Farmer. He was one of the greatest fox-hunters in Devonshire, and had collected such a number of foxes pads, that they entirely covered his stable door and door-posts, all of which he had himself cut off when in at the death. At his own particular request, a pad was placed in each of his hands, when laid out in his coffin; and he was interred in the parish church of Stoke, attended by the huntsmen and whippers-in of the packs he had hunted with.

FACETIOUS EPISTLE TO A COAT.

My old Friend,

PERMIT me to address you by this respectable title, although it be scarcely ten months since we contracted

* Note, by the Editor.—We beg leave to observe to our ingenious correspondent, that Boeter is not Greek for Clamator, a Huntsman; nor does it belong to any regular derivation from the root, or theme, βοάω. Some people, however, will strain hard for a pun: hence it is probable, that the writer of this supposed etymology, perhaps some Sporting Parson, might have the Evangelist's φωνὴ βοῶντος ἐν τῇ ἐρήμῳ, ringing in his ears, when he conceived the correspondence between the name of this huntsman and his profession.

contracted an intimate acquaintance; but such to-day is the fragility of the bonds which constitute the closest friendship, that I see no reason for resisting so short a proof of it, particularly as of all the friends with whom I have formed a connection within that time, you are the only one who has remained faithful to me. I must confess, however, it is a long time since you lost that brilliant glossiness which distinguished you on your first acquaintance; and though your zeal to serve me be undiminished, your physical powers have long since ceased to answer your obliging wishes. In this respect, alas! you are the mere shadow of yourself.—What a variety of circumstances you bring to my memory? I may well call you my old friend.

Notwithstanding your incontestible claim to my gratitude, my dear coat, I am obliged to break off a connection which I could no longer cultivate, but with injury to myself. Do not charge me with ingratitude! You have no reason. I shall never forget the services you have done me in your youth. If for several months I was favourably received by a crowd of people comme il faut; if I have been invited to fetes by fine women du bon genre, it is to you I am indebted for these favours. They found me a man of wit, praised my talents, and pronounced me a charming fellow!—O! my coat, all this was the effect of your freshness, of your original gloss. The tender looks, the sweet vows that I obtained from Chloe! it is to you I am obliged for them.—I shall never forget the delightful ball at which you first essayed your power. Ah! how many heads you made giddy on that night!—how many hearts you made sigh! "Oh, he is a charming fellow! there is no withstanding him!" exclaimed each fair one. "What a shape! how gracefully he dances! Should I snatch a moment's rest!"

"Would you leave me then!" says Eliza to me, with a languishing look of ineffable softness.—"Remember you are engaged to me for the next set!" adds Rosina.—"No, no! he promised me!" subjoins Emira.—Elvira complains she can never see me: Zulme vows she will take no apology, but that I must dine with her positively the next day. Oh, my coat, my dear coat! never, no never, shall the moments of pleasure which you have made me taste be erased from my memory!

But, on the other hand, since old age has worn off your freshness, has soiled and tumbled you, of how many unpleasant circumstances have you not been the cause? It is not your fault: I know it. Youth vanishes like the spring. Nothing can escape the ravages of him who devours even iron and stone. He, yes he it is, who has destroyed the charm which procured you so much respect and consideration: but, with the same zeal we caress the rose, must we shun the thorn. Ah! my old friend, how times are changed! No more pressing invitations assail me! no more fetes! no more caresses! My wit and talents are no more: I am no longer the charming fellow that I was.—Adieu, you tender looks! adieu, you sweetly breathing wishes! adieu, you happy sighs! the friends whom you have made me, have ceased to know me. If, perchance, I meet any of them—"Lord! how changed you are!" they exclaim. "Have you been ill?"—Alas! I never was better in my life; but for you, you my old friend, you look so miserable, so poor, so worn!—Among those who do not recollect me, I must, however, except my creditors: as for them, they never knew me better. It was you, too, who who procured me the credit which they offered me; and while your youth remained, I never saw them. But now their visits distress me—absolutely incommode me. They are the only persons who ever knock at my door. With what a critical eye they examine you! What anxiety in their looks! I dare no longer appear with you, either in the public gardens, or in private companies. Should I offer my hand at a ball to a fine woman, or my arm in the street, Madame is always engaged. Refusals every where—every where disdain and affronts! — I can bear them no longer!—I have weighed the pleasures against the inconveniencies which you have caused me, and find, alas! the balance on the side of the latter; therefore, my old friend, we must part, but without mutual reproaches. Do not fear, I shall not hand you over to some vile-cast clothesman! No: I shall carefully preserve you, as a monument to remind me of the manner in which the world dispenses its respect and its disdain.

TOM THREADBARE.

ANECDOTE OF A BROKER'S GIG.

LATELY two gentlemen took their departure from Carlisle, in a gig, and proceeded towards Abbey-Holm. On their entering that extensive parish, they found the road very bad; and as they approached the town, it was rendered far worse, by an attempt (as they supposed) to make it better by laying large heaps of sand in the middle of it. In short, about half past nine o'clock at night, and about a quarter of a mile distant from the town, the gig was overturned; and not only overturned, but shivered to pieces;—and the overturning and breaking were not all; for they lost the horse also! — So far the bargain seemed a very bad one.—Like Apollo, in the burletta of Midas, they found and they were as much at a loss as his godship, "what to do."—After some deliberation, one of them set off in search of the horse, whilst the other, gathering up the saddle, and some part of the harness, took them upon his back, and trudged into the town; whence (being well-known) several people went out, to assist in the search. His companion arrived after a long time, but without the horse. The others brought in the wheels and several fragments of the gig; and, about half past twelve, the horse marched up to the door of a public-house, (where the travellers were refreshing themselves, after their misfortune, and fatigue) trailing the harness on each side of him, disincumbered of the body and wheels! The circumstances, all together, were so ludicrous, that the past danger and the toil were soon forgotten.

"No bones broke, but sorely pepper'd:"

CUCKOO CONTROVERSY.

To the EDITORS of the SPORTING MAGAZINE.

GENTLEMEN,

ATTEMPTS to correct error, have some times tended to perpetuate it. Aware of W. D.'s suggestions, which he ought to have termed it, I conceived that I had obviated the objection, by stating that I had heard the cry of the birds, a characteristic so peculiar as to preclude mistake. Indeed my opportunities of examining them were such as to render it more probable that I should mistake the rook for the daw, than that bird called (from what cause I know not) the goat-sucker, for the cuckoo. I have met with with more than one person whose observations corroborate mine.—Those made by Mr. Jenner and W. D (of the correctness of which I do not entertain the least doubt) are certainly sufficiently interesting to the curious, without establishing a system of natural economy so contrary to all analogy. It is, I am apt to believe, no easy matter for the cuckoo to obtain a residence, and procure a sufficiency of food; and cuckoos, as well as men, must submit to necessity. They may each have their foundling-hospitals; but I should suspect the one as readily as the other, of a natural propensity to abandon their offspring. The means and leisure necessary to pursue the enquiry, Gentlemen, are denied me, otherwise I should be ambitious to communicate, through your medium, what I now solicit from others. But W. D. may rest assured, that the same disposition which leads me to reject the marvellous, will secure an acknowledgment of error, whenever conviction may demand it from

A Charge of Sporting with Antique Monuments.

To the Editors of the Sporting Magazine.

Gentlemen,

I KNOW not where I can better apply than to your liberal publication, for the purpose of making my protest against what I conceive a very unjust censure passed upon my character. Allow me, therefore, without further preface, to state my case to your readers.

Three years ago, on the death of a distant relation, I came unexpectedly into possession of an estate situated in one of the most pleasing rural situations in this kingdom.—Having always had a fondness for the country, which, till that time, professional engagements would not suffer me to indulge, I determined, without hesitation, to fix my future residence on the spot which fortune had bestowed upon me; I therefore hastened down, with the purpose of making such alterations and improvements as fancy or convenience might suggest, in a place which had been more indebted to nature, than to the attention of its late possessors. In going the round of my domains, I observed, in a sweet retired vale, within the flexure of a clear brook, a mass of unsightly ruins, overgrown with weeds, offering to the eye nothing better than some half-demolished walls, surrounding heaps of shapeless rubbish. The soil about it was rich, and the spot was well defended "from cold septentrion blasts," by a rising hillock to the north, and a tall plantation to the east. Among my little tastes, one of the strongest is a delight in the cultivation of rare and beautiful plants; and as at the instant a plan of fortifications was suggested to uncle Toby, his bowling-green presented itself to his imagination; so, on the view of this sequestered place, I cried to myself, in a kind of rapture—"What a charming situation for a botanical garden!"—"And then (I proceeded) we shall find stones enow among this rubbish for an inclosure; and on that largest heap, which overlooks the stream, I will build a little summer-house, and convert all the base of it into a piece of rock work."—To make my story short, so much did this scheme run in my head, that I did not rest till it was put into execution; and if, Gentlemen, you are lovers of plants, I may venture to say you would be delighted to see the number

ber of beautiful vegetables which I have already established here, and would enjoy the verdant scenery round the windows of my little cabinet.

But now comes the unpleasant part of the history. Soon after the ruins were demolished, and the edifices erected upon them, a Dr. Moulder, a very learned man, and a distinguished fellow of the Antiquarian Society, who happened to be visiting in the neighbourhood, called one morning when I was abroad, and desired my gardener to shew him about my grounds, particularly requesting to see the remains of the convent. "Convent! Sir," says the fellow, "we have no such thing that I ever heard of; but, perhaps, your worship means the old walls that my master pulled down when he made his new garden by the brook. "Pulled down!" cried the Doctor; "what do you mean?—but show me to the place." The man took him to the vale, and was going to open the garden-door, when a flat stone in the wall, on which were some traces of letters, caught the Doctor's eye. He stopped short, lifted up his hands, and broke forth into exclamations which frightened the poor fellow, and of which he remembers only the words "barbarous! monstrous! sacrilege!" He then took out of his pocket a memorandum-book, and began, with much pains, and no little ill-humour, to transcribe the inscription, which unfortunately gave him additional trouble by being fixed in the wall the wrong end upwards. He ended by exactly measuring the length and breadth of the stone with a pocket rule. "Well, (says he, turning to the man) I see you have done your work completely. I suppose you dug up the old building from the foundation?"—"We did, Sir, (replied he) and a power of trouble we had with it. They say it was a famous place in the time of the Papishes. But if your worship wants to see any more grave-stones, I can show you some." The Doctor acquiescing in this proposal, he was led to the fragments of a few more monumental stones in different parts of the wall, the rude letters of which, where they were at all legible, he faithfully copied, and then, without deigning to pay the least attention to my improvements, he made the man an acknowledgment, and hastily walked off.

The circumstances of this visit, when related, only diverted me, till a few months afterwards, an acquaintance calling upon me,—"Do you know, (says he, with a serious face) what an attack has been made upon you in print?" I was startled; upon which he took out a periodical publication, renowned for its gravity in trifles, and shewed me a letter concerning the lately existing remains of the Monastery of Cistercians, in the parish of ———, which I presently discovered to have been written by my testy visitant. In this letter, the owner of the place was treated in the harshest terms, as "a Vandal, a foe to reverend antiquity, a violator of the dead, and a person void of all taste and all regard for literature."—"The precious relics which time and the rough hand of reformation had spared, were utterly destroyed by my ruder hands; and, as far as in me lay, I had contributed to the overthrow of one of the most pleasing and useful of studies."

To these charges, Sir, I am loth to plead guilty; for though I have not ranked in that class of men, whose sole business in life is the employment of literary leisure, yet neither by education nor habit am I a total stranger to the Muses; and I trust

I trust I have a heart not inaccessible to the pleasures of knowledge, nor hardened against the impressions of sentiment. I must, indeed, acknowledge that I have not learned to value a thing merely because it is old and useless. Nor do my feelings plead with me in favour of relinquishing to the bones of ancient possessors the perpetual occupation of those seats which, when living, they wisely selected on account of their beauty or convenience. I see not why I should not enjoy my garden as well as the monks did theirs in the same spot; and I think it a much less crime to disturb the repose of their skeletons than to banish Flora and Pomona from a favourite residence. The rights of the dead, I confess, affect me little in comparison with those of the living; and I reckon it high time for the particles of bodies three or four centuries defunct, to return quietly to the bosom of the earth, and fulfil their destiny. As to the share of posthumous fame which may be preserved by the inscription of Gualter de Thorp Prior hujus Monast, I can accuse myself of a very small degree of injury in bringing it to a conclusion, when so many elaborate works under the title of Monasticons, Repertories, Topographical Remains, County Histories, &c. have taken such laudable pains to secure the immortality of these worthies by monuments ære perennius.

The motives which inspire a reverence for the remains of antiquity, and plead against their demolition, are various; but I think the rational ones may be reduced to very few. Where they possess intrinsic beauty or grandeur, and afford specimens of the taste and ingenuity of former ages, they certainly deserve preservation; as likewise where they illustrate manners and modes of living, concerning which history is silent or obscure. Also, when they are associated with any remarkable event. But why should ruinous piles, without elegance or magnificence, be left to cumber the ground? Surely the stones of our old castles and gloomy monasteries, are not so sacred as not to be applied to the better uses, suggested by modern convenience.

REMARKS upon WIND-GUNS, &c.

IT will not be out of place here to add some remarks on wind-guns: when the ball or cane is full of condensed air, it should not be exposed much to the sun, or placed near a fire, or handled with a hot hand, at least not before a ball or two has been discharged, as, by causing an expansion of the air, it might burst the magazine, if fully charged with air, since several accidents have happened from imprudently charging the magazine with air, a thing not easily done, unless by a very strong man. Nor is the explosion of these instruments dangerous, unless they are made of steel, in which case they burst like a shell; but, when of copper, only rend; so that unless the hand is near the opening, no one can receive injury. And as, at all events, it is by no means an object desirable to make these guns perform their utmost, we ought to content ourselves with a less number of discharges than they are capable of producing, and by that means render them perfectly safe.

If they are used to kill small birds for their plumage, with dust shot, a piece of stamped hat-wadding should be first put down into the chamber, and then the shot will not injure the valve by plugging it up.

An enquiry into the improvements which the King of Prussia* has made in these guns, if any, would be very desirable, and perhaps some of your Correspondents may favour us with it, as at present we only know of two workmen who are justly celebrated for the manufacture of them in London, viz. Mr. Bate, of the Borough, and Mr. Wilkinson, of Poppin's court, Fleet-street.

As to our gunsmith's in general, they are truly a motive for exultation to this country; their workmanship cannot be paralleled by all the world united; and they better deserve marks of distinction, than any body of men whatever, as men of talents. Would it not therefore be just to divide the orders of

* The King of Prussia is said to have a regiment of fifteen hundred men using wind-guns, all made under the inspection of one man, who is his prisoner; and that they act without any diminution of force, owing to something that supplies the space of air on discharging. Extraordinary Escape from a Bullock.

ONE Thomas White, a butcher in the city of Edinburgh, had lately a very extraordinary escape: having gone in along with one of his companions, to drive some bullocks out of Provost Stewart's park, the bullocks, after being driven up to the gate, turned, while one of the lads was employed in opening the gate. White, when the animals turned, chased them to the foot of the park, where there was a bull well known to be very ferocious, and which immediately pursued him.—He ran till he was sensible that he was losing breath, and that the animal was gaining upon him: he threw himself flat upon his back, when the creature coming up, transfixed him with one stroke of its horn, which passed through the belly, close to the borders of the chest, the tip of the horn coming out through the lower part of the chest, so that both chest and belly were opened, and the horn had such a hold upon the lower ribs, as to turn him over before it slipt its hold.—He was saved from a second stroke, which would have surely been fatal, by his dog running at the bull, and catching it by the heel, when the bull ran round the park, roaring very furiously, the dog, which was of the small shepherd kind, still keeping its hold. White's companion, coming down at this time, carried him away upon his shoulders, and laid him in a safe place behind the railing of the park: and the bull, after having shook off the dog, returned to the place where he had left the man, after having gored him, snuffing at the blood, and tearing up the ground with his hoofs. White was carried on men's shoulders to the house of a surgeon, who put back a part of the bowels which protruded at one of the wounds, and cut off, as is reported, a part of the omentum.—He was conveyed to the hospital where, after keeping his bed for eight or ten days, he made a perfect recovery!

Wonderful Produce of Honey by Bees.

THE year 1799 was so unfavourable to bees, that it is supposed three-fourths of the stocks in the kingdom died through want; that the present year 1800 is, on the other hand, equally as propitious for the collection of honey; most hives having already collected amazing quantities, far above what their winter consumption requires. Among other recent instances of this assertion, Mr. James Bonner, bee-master, took the following very extraordinary quantity of honey out of a bee-hive which had been formed in the roof of a gentleman's house in the neighbourhood of Glasgow:—

Fine white virgin honey 50lbs.
Of brown comb 46lbs. and
Left for support of the bees 30lbs.

Not one of the bees, young or old, were killed, and though there appeared to be at least 50,000 of them, they were all the production of one queen or mother bee. Most of the honey, from the observation of the gentleman to whom the house belonged was collected in the latter end of June and the month of July. —Caledonian Mercury.

Thus it appears that two singular, and as it should seem contradictory facts, have been observed to occur in natural history (owing to the late unusual dry weather), respecting bees

bees and wasps. Of wasps, almost none have yet been seen. Bees, on the contrary, have thriven unusually, and made such a quantity of honey, in so short a space of time, that in some instances it has passed all conception.

SPORTING INTELLIGENCE.

HAMBLETONIAN has won another race at York. Our private letter says, he was whipt a great deal. Sir Harry Vane has gained several matches.

Sir Thomas Gascoigne has sold his colt Slap-bang, which won the sweepstakes at York for 600 guineas.

The match of Diamond against Warter, to be run at Newmarket in October, interests the gentlemen of the turf very deeply.—Great bets are making, and it is supposed as much money will depend on the issue, as when the former ran against Hambletonian.—At present, the betting is nearly equal.

The two favourite saddle-horses of Mr. Boothby were, on the 11th ult. sold at Tattersall's: one was knocked down at sixty-six, and the other seventy guineas.

The King of Spain lately chose (in person) twenty of the finest Andalusian horses as a present for Bonaparte. Such is the care taken of them, that they are to be three months in going from Madrid to Paris. They are to be presented to the Chief Consul by a Gentleman Usher of the King of Spain.

A gentleman of Ipswich lately betted fifty guineas, that he would walk from that place to Sudbury, and back again, a distance of forty-four miles, in twelve hours, and lost. He then proposed to ride his horse the same distance, for double the sum, in four hours; the bet was accepted, and he won with apparent ease.

Two gentlemen, a few days ago, undertook for a supper and twenty guineas, to row from Westminster-bridge to Richmond-bridge, against a gentleman, who was to walk the same distance. The wager was won by the latter by thirty minutes; the rowers performed it in two hours and ten minutes.

On the 12th of August, the silver cup, value 35 guineas, given by the Proprietors of Ranelagh, in honour of the Prince of Wales's Birth-day, and shot for by the Members of the Volunteer Associations, was won by Mr. Stevenson, of the Mary-le-bonne Association. There were six shots more in the target this year than the last.

A man named Aspenal, sixty-two years of age, has undertaken for a wager, to walk sixty-six miles in twenty-four hours. The odds are six to four against him, and we are told large sums of money are depending on the issue.

Mr. F——, the Barrister, had lately occasion to cane a black-leg at a Coffee-house near the Temple; after which, he could not but laugh very heartily at the professional propriety with which the fellow handed him his card!

A private letter, of a recent date, from the vicinity of Mr. Windham's estate in Norfolk says, —"You will no doubt be surprised when I inform you, that, notwithstanding the dry weather we have experienced, experienced, our shooting is in a great degree prevented by the partridges, which are uncommonly numerous, by taking refuge in the standing corn, nothing but oats having been yet carried in this part of the county."

The grouse on the Yorkshire Moors have been more scarce this year than the oldest sportsmen ever remember. Many gentlemen gave up the diversion of shooting after trying it for one day.

A few evenings since, as two gentlemen were coming from a dinner in the city, one of them more flush both of wine and cash than his companion, took off the hat of the other, and tossed it over the railing of St. Paul's; after which, he immediately paid the price of his frolic, by buying him a new one. The other finding himself so amply recompenced for the loss of a shabby chapeau, turned round to his friend and said—"As you have acted so well in this instance, all that I have now to request is, that you will take the same liberty with my coat."

On the last day of the Hereford races, there was a boat-race on the river Wye. The match was between a Thames wherry, the property of a gentleman of Hereford, rowing with two oars, and a cutter-built boat with four oars. The distance was from the Bridge to Belmont, and back to the place of starting; a space which affords the most beautiful sheet of still water, highly favourable for the purpose. The wherry, from her peculiar construction, bore off the prize, notwithstanding the Herculean labours of her opponent. The banks of the river were lined with spectators, highly gratified with the novelty of the scene, which was much heightened by the fineness of the weather, and the number of pleasure boats on the occasion.

The Oyster-Eater.—A French Gentleman, not far from Piccadilly, has undertaken, for a wager of five guineas, to eat twenty-two dozen of the largest oysters that can be procured, and drink two bottles of sherry, within the space of two hours!!!

When the Turkish Ambassador and suite embarked at Yarmouth, his Excellency ordered on board five hundred cucumbers and five hundred eggs, for himself and attendants. While on board, he made use of his carriage for bed-chamber, eating parlour, and smoaking-room.

Creepers.—A society of fanatics has lately been formed in this prolific island, called creepers.—We have heard of the jumpers; and suppose that the first mentioned set of mad-caps is not a new society; but a sort of undergraduates in the jumping-college.

A curious circumstance took place at Christ-church, a few days since; Mr. Lane having hired a horse of Mr. Barns, to go to Lymington, Mr. Spelt went to get the horse, which was then at grass, and, by mistake, took another belonging to Mr. Scott. The animal was, on his return, turned out into the same pasture the next day, and the mistake having been discovered by Mr. Scott, he has commenced an action against Mr. Spelt, who has offered to compromise the affair. The horses are very much alike, and it is expected that the action, if tried, will exhibit to the Court some ludicrous circumstances.

In consequence of the curious account given in the public prints, of the swimming Elephant at Poonah, the people at Margate were lately surprised at the monstrous appearance of a live animal in the sea during bathing time.—The bathers all pronounced it a visit

visit from the famous Elephanta; but, on discovery, it was found to be the rolling of a lady, who keeps a cheesemonger's shop in the Borough, and who had been taking her first dip!

The youngest of the Princesses of Courland, who had run away with one of her father's musicians, with a determination to marry him, has been apprehended in her flight; but the musician has effected his escape with all his papers, among which is a promise of marriage in full form, under the hand of the Princess, and several letters which add to its validity. Fifty thousand crowns have been offered to him for the delivery of these papers; but he persists in retaining them, and is resolved to insist on the completion of the marriage, when the young princess shall come of age.

Lately was married, Mr. Thomas Couch, an owner of several ballast boats in Lynn, aged seventy-five, to Mrs. Buffham, aged fifty-two. The blooming maid had lived with him in the capacity of an housekeeper only a fortnight.

The following curious advertisement appeared in the Hibernian Telegraph:

Advantageous Proposal.—A gentleman advanced in years, who is possessed of a considerable fortune, the apparent heir to which (a graceless nephew) has treated him in a manner utterly unpardonable, would be glad to enter into the connubial state with an healthy pregnant young widow, of a reputation unsullied, however contracted her sphere in life may be. The utmost secrecy and honour may be relied on, and by inclosing her name and address, to X. Y. Z. under cover, to the printer, she will be immediately waited on by the advertiser.

A tallow-chandler of the name of Holland, who lives in a court in Gracechurch-street, lately charged his wife before the sitting Alderman, with beating him, and threatening his life, as formerly. He made a long string of complaints against this undutiful wife, but did not charge her with inconstancy. She was a well-dressed good-looking woman, and could not resist making game of her affectionate husband in Court. The Alderman asked her if she had any children? She said, no; her husband had taken care of that. The officers who served the warrant upon this lady gave an account of the unruliness of her temper, by resisting their authority. She was committed to Giltspur-street compter, till she could find security for her good behaviour, to her husband and others.

Among the ingenious inventions, lately produced, is a speaking trumpet, the mouth-piece of which unscrews, and a pistol screws in, which, when discharged, makes a report equal to a nine-pounder. It will be used for firing signals.

By this trumpet, says another writer, the Irish Members in the Imperial Parliament may certainly make themselves heard, especially as it is convertable at pleasure into a pistol.

Two slaves, the one belonging to Mr. J. Moore, the other to Mr. Cramer, of Philadelphia, lately met at Powles-hook Ferry, near that city, for the purpose of deciding a point of honour; but an Officer of Justice having intimation of the affair, likewise attended on the ground, and took one of them, Citizen Sambo, into custody: the other escaped.

Natural Curiosity--Lately was taken out of a farm occupied by John Lee, near Rivington Peak, a bird's nest, of the linnet species, which had four young ones in it, two of which were perfectly white.

FEAST OF WIT; OR, SPORTSMAN'S HALL.

A LADY one morning sat down by the side of Dicky Dickinson (the first governor of Scarborough) and asked him if he would marry? The governor thinking this a very unbecoming question for a lady to ask, said, "Why do you ask me such a question?" Because, (said she) I would have you."—"But (says the governor) I would not have you, because you are so much like my clock." "Like your clock, (says the lady) in what respect am I like your clock?"—"Well, says the governor, if you must know, it is always too forward; so I think you are."

A smart Repartee.—A person of Scarborough was advising his daughter not to marry.—In order that his advice might make a greater impression, he told her that Saint Paul said, "Those that married did well; but those that did not, did better." Well father, says the young lady, let me do well, and let others do better that can.

The Retort Courteous.—One Mr. Suckling, a country clergyman, in the county of Norfolk, having been insulted by a gentleman who carried it so far as to say, "Doctor, you know your gown is your protection." The other replied, but it shall not be yours;" and immediately stripping it off, gave his antagonist a severe drubbing.

It has been said, that the late trials for clerical non-residence, has obliged the clergy to repair to their respective posts. But if this be the case, there are more church livings in Brighton and Margate, than half the kingdom besides.

John Flint, for setting fire to a barn; Mary Divine, for telling fortunes; James Lumb, for sheep-stealing; and Andrew Hang-er, for stealing hemp, may be found in the calendars of the several gaols of this kingdom.

By a strange sort of nominal sympathy, we find the following visitors among the last arrivals at the watering places: Mrs. Flood, Mr. Rivers, Miss Drabble, Mr. Duckworth, and Miss Drake.

The poor Marker who was lately struck by Captain B——D, at Ilfracomb, whilst playing at Billiards, may, in the Theatrical phrase, be truly said to have received his Cue.

At an inn in a market town upon the great road, leading to Holyhead, where a company of comedians were murdering the language of some of our best dramatic writers, an Irish gentleman sat in the kitchen smoaking his pipe, and regarding with pleasure a fowl roasting for his supper—a tall meagre figure stalks in, and after an earnest melancholy look at the fowl, he retired with a sigh: repeating his visit a second time, he exclaimed, "By G—d that fowl will never be done in time."—"What do you main!" said the Irishman, "that is for my supper, and you shan't touch a feather of it."—"Oh," replied the other, you misunderstand me, "I do not want the fowl, but I am to play Oroonoko this evening, and we cannot begin for want of the jack-chain!"

A few days since, says a Paris paper, as a fellow was beating a drum, and exhibiting the agility of his dancing bear, opposite the house of the Russian Ambassador, the servants insisted on his removing to

in some other quarter. The fellow obeyed with reluctance, observing that it was very hard his frisky friend should be treated with so much indignity, and so near the doors of one of his own countrymen.

It is said that the breed of Spanish asses in this country is much obstructed by the jealousy of the Spanish Court, which sets a high value on that animal. This, however, ought not to make us uneasy. The article is too plenty among ourselves to induce us to "covet our neighbours' asses."

In former times it appears, from ancient records, that the neighbourhood of Clerkenwell and Coldbath Fields used to be much frequented by the Citizens, as country quarters. His Excellency, Governor ARIS takes so much pains in puffing off the delights and comforts of his Castle, that it seems as if he meant to tempt the pent-up inhabitants of the town to repair to the Correction House for wholesome air, pleasant lodging, and luxurious entertainment. This species of defence used by his excellency proves rather too much!

The jockey who lately rode Sir C. Banbury's colt Gig at Epsom races, unfortunately could not reduce himself to the proper weight. Governor ARIS is expected to supply even the turf with some useful hints on this subject.

Several young married people have made merry on the late political union of a very old couple, viz. Sir JOHN BULL, as good-natured an old batchelor as ever tipped a a pot of brown stout, and Lady HIBERNIA, as spruce an old maid as ever tasted whiskey. Both parties descend from the most antient families in Europe, and the match may in every respect be considered as mutually advantageous. It was high time that it should be consummated; for the Lady, owing probably to her long celibacy, was growing very peevish and quarrelsome, and, from the fear of dying an old maid, had made several attempts to throw herself into the arms of a debauched and emaciated French gallant, the long inveterate rival of Sir JOHN.

Twenty dozen of gudgeons were lately caught near Richmond Bridge; but this is not surprizing, when it is considered that two of the fishing party were Lawyers.

The enemies of BONAPARTE are not a little cheered by the information that his bust has been made in Porcelain. The brittle texture and exposure to numerous accidents, they consider as ominous. A consul in crockery may be easily thrown down!

It has formerly been thought a great exertion of human skill for a man to keep his head above water. The genius of the French leads them another way, and they consider the bottom of the sea as a place of refuge, to which the British navy will never be able to follow them.

The story of PADDY PONSONBY and the poker seems to have suggested a new sort of recognizance to the Irish Government. The Rev. DENNIS TAFFE, confined for 16 months on a charge of high treason, has been lately liberated on his word of honour not to commit any such offence in future.

A few evenings since, a gentleman rather forward, sallied from an alehouse into the street to call the watch, when mistaking an old oyster woman who was sitting with a lanthorn, he collared her, and dragged her into the house to take charge of the offending party. This has been not unaptly called, a very natural mistake.

Mr. Burke used to relate the following story:—When he had made a speech which was well received from the hustings of Bristol, at the time of the rupture between this country and America, poor Cruger, who was one of the candidates, was standing by his side. Equally averse with Burke to the American contest, but master of no other language than the short vocabulary of the counting house, he cried, "I say ditto, to Mr. Burke; I say ditto to Mr. Burke."

Anecdote.—John Jegon, many years gone by, Master of Bene't college, Cambridge, was a most serious man, and grave governor, yet notwithstanding of a most facetious disposition. For instance; while master of the college, he he chanced to punish all the undergraduates for some general offence, and the penalty was put upon their heads in the buttery; and because he disdained to convert the money to any private use, it was expended in new whitening the hall of the college; whereupon a scholar hung up these verses on the screen:

Doctor Jegon, Bene't college Master,
Broke the scholars heads, and gave the walls a plaster.

But the Doctor had not any whit impaired the readiness of his parts by his age; for, perusing the paper extempore, he subscribed,

Knew I but the wag that writ these verses in bravery,
I would commend him for his wit, but whip him for his knavery.

New Cross Readings lately introduced at Margate by Mr. Quick.—Yesterday, the Right Honourable the Speaker—was convicted of keeping a disorderly house.

A fine Turtle, weighing 150 pounds—was carried before the Sitting Alderman, and committed for further examination.

Last Tuesday Lord Viscount —— was married—and afterwards hung in chains, pursuant to his sentence.

Escaped from the New Gaol, Terence M'Dermot—if he will return, he will be kindly received.

Sunday last Doctor —— preached at the Chapel Royal, before the Nobility—bets ran high, but he performed it with ease in thirteen minutes.

Wednesday, the Lady of Nicholas ——, Esq. was safely delivered of a son, to the great joy, &c.—it measured forty-two feet, and is supposed to have lain in the water a long time.

Tuesday afternoon a mad bullock ran furiously into a china shop in Fleet-street—he was most favourably received, and kept the house in a roar the whole performance.—Due notice will be given of his second appearance.

Friday a blind man fell into a saw-pit—to which he was conducted by the Master of the Ceremonies.

Yesterday were executed at the Old Bailey—they all appeared in the Collars of their respective Orders.

Saturday being the last day of of Term—the villains made off, after doing all the mischief they could.

A Clergyman in Ireland, being very anxious to obtain some good fish to entertain a Right Rev. Bishop, mentioned the circumstance to an officer of the Artillery residing near him. The officer next day caught a fine large pike, which he sent to the Clergyman with the following letter:

"Dear Sir—I send you a pike—God forgive me, designedly for his Lordship's belly, into which, from what you told me, there will be no great labour in thrusting it."

Bartholomew Fair ought to be placed earlier in the Summer. Coming so near the Winter Theatres, the difference, in the new Pieces at least is hardly perceptible!

POETRY.

THE HIGH COURT OF DIANA.

THE FEMALE RUNNING MATCH.

FROM THE OLD ENGLISH GENTLEMAN.

AND now to crown the whole with festal grace,
Sir Humphry, to the girls proposed a race,
And for the damsel who outrun the rest,
Nam'd the fair prize, and ey'd each eager breast—
A prize that Allan's self would soon bestow,
Enough to set their bosoms in a glow.
"A chaplet sweet (he cried) no maid would miss,
And mark, ye dainty girls! a sweeter kiss!"
The garland tho' it told October near,
In each dim flow'ret of the waining year;
Yet beaming thro' the cornflowers modest blue,
And the pale pansy of a fainter hue,
The marigold's intenser flame display'd,
"This (cried the knight) shall crown the victor maid!"
Gay from the porch to meet the rustic troop,
Advanc'd the ladies in a motley groupe;
There Madam Squintall, ponder'd o'er the show;
Her daughter tripping on fantastic toe;
And lo! her eye-balls stern, on Juliet nail'd;
Prue stood, as in her mother earth dove-tail'd!
Now all on tip-toe, singled out by lot,
Appear'd four lasses on the appointed spot;
One, for the match perhaps too tightly lac'd,
As taper'd like the inverted cone, her waist;
Who, struggling to be crown'd, it seems the first,
Had, ere she started, all her braces burst:
More politic and wise, another maid,
In "azure bed-gown" airily array'd;
Its flowings by a sash of pink represt,
Her bashful cheek low bent upon her breast;
Her cheek, by which the bard would deem outdone,
The melting peach, "its side against the sun,"
Another, neat at every pretty point,
And supple at each lubricated joint,
With features larger, from a cap round-ear'd,
And "shining elbows" that so plump appear'd;
With lovely feet, so famous at the fair,
That drew where'er she stepp'd, the rustic stare;
And anckles that so delicate and smooth,
Won vast applause from ev'ry buzzing booth.—
The last, attracting to her easy mien,
Her native elegance—each eye I ween,
Adorning by her simple grace a gown,
Though nicely needled, plain and russet brown;
With kerchief snowy white, without a flaw,
And light upon her head a hat of straw,
Tied with a purple ribbon, whose bright hue,
O'er her young bloom a kindling lustre threw;
Where gleam'd some sunny freckles sprinkled thin,
To give new richness to her whitened skin.
Thus o'er the thorn, amidst the vernal beam,
Thin sprent at first its earlier blossoms gleam;
So quaintly lurk'd beneath her eye a mole,
Whence her dark orbs an arch effulgence stole.
Whilst heaving, as sweet Emma's bosom heav'd,
A ringlet's golden glow, her kercheif's white reliev'd.

Strait at the signal, started "bed-gown blue,"
And, as on airy pinion, Emma flew,
And (bursted boddice) seem'd to mock the wind
In speed, and "shining elbows" puff'd behind.
Hot was the race—Now bursted stays beside,
With strong exertion, e'en with Emma vied;
Then "bed-gown blue," had Emma far outstripp'd,
And now "blue bed-gown" on a sudden slipp'd;
And half recov'ring, slided off, as shod
With glass, and tumbled on the shaven sod;
When Emma pass'd, and distancing the rest,
Sprung to the goal, the victor girl confest.
The flow'ry garland Allan wav'd in air,
With eager transport seized the panting fair;
Deep as she blush'd, her hat of straw unbound,
He with the wreath her starting tresses crown'd,
And hastening to confer a brighter palm,
Breath'd o'er her lips, and stole ambrosial balm.

THE MERRY MAL-ENTENDU.

A RECENT FACT.

NICKNAMES, they say, are foolish things,
A sort of sapscull jargon:
On which each dolt the changes rings,
A question I'll not arg' on.

But this I know, and dare to say,
They oft create a pother:
In which the wording points one way,
And meaning takes another.

Thus Jack and Nan, at Stirbitch Fair,
Two servants at an Inn;
A chambermaid and waiter rare,
Were caught in quibblers gin.

For John in country had been bred,
And Ann had been the same;
And neither yet had troubled head,
With things of twofold name.

When lo! two blades of London lore,
Who chanc'd that way to pass,
Bid John, when both were half seas o'er,
To bring a looking-glass.

So John up to the chamber went,
Unconscious of his error,
And, quick returning, did present,
The smooth and polish'd mirror.

Blockhead! says one: says t'other, dunce!
(And Nan within ear-shot,)
A glass! beshrew your empty sconce!
We want a chamber-pot.

Nan, hearing all, upon the wing,
Her way up stairs she takes:
While Jack fetch'd down the proper thing,
And rectified mistakes.

Next day, in state, came Lady Pride,
And out of chariot bolting,
"I'm all in such a muck," she cry'd,
"With so much dust and jolting."

"Show me a room up stairs" "Yes, Ma'am,"
"And now, d'ye hear my lass?
"That I may see how touz'd I am,
"Bring me a looking-glass."

"O yes," says Nan, brisk as a bee,
"I'll do it in a crack;
"I'm not so great a fool," says she,
"As that great numpscull Jack."

So to the chamber up she flew,
Brought down the crock'ry ware,
And cry'd, "Here, Ma'am, is one quite new,
"And bought just now at Fair!"

"That!—Why I want a looking-glass!"
"I know it, Ma'am," says Nan:
"They took in Jack, poor silly ass,
"But take in me, who can!"

PARTRIDGE SHOOTING.

WHEN first with dewy fingers grey-ey'd morn
Moistens the earth, the early fowler springs
From his soft couch, and bursts the bonds of sleep,
Eager he hies to that auspicious sport.
Quick through the rustling stubble up the wind,
His pointers range inquisitive, with nose
Erect, and waving tail, they seem each breeze
To question, by no common instinct led.
How regular they quarter! how exact
Each furrow try! at last old Sancho turns,
And checks his speed; then cautious creeping, draws:
Now fixt he stands; his stiffen'd tail, his eye,
His foot, perchance uplifted, points the game.
His distant brethren now observe their chief,
Nor dare proceed; in different attitudes,
And various postures, stedfast they remain.
So,

So at their general's call, pursuing troops
Stop. Sylvio, with quick palpitating breast,
And anxious step, advances; sudden springs,
Beneath his feet, the sounding covey: he,
With glance unerring, singles out his bird,
And the quick load arrests its rapid flight:
It falls, and fluttering beats th' ensanguin'd plain;
Cow'ring the joyous dogs now creep around
The bleeding game, and with their eager lips
Mumbling they turn and toss it o'er and o'er.
But Sylvio, with observant eye, where flew
The scatter'd covey, mark'd: and now again
Old Sancho tosses high his nose, and winds
The latent prey; he stops: see! Resto, Don,
Each dog has found his bird; it springs, it drops:
Another rises, down it falls: stop, stop,
My friend, nor merciless the total race
Extirpate, but reflect how few the days,
How short the space this youthful tribe have liv'd:
Nor thus, unwisely, in one hour destroy
The sport of many a day; leave that offence
To the vile, murd'rous, poaching crew, intent
On blood, and eager only to destroy.
Humaner thou, thy fatal hand restrain.
Go, mount old Steady, and triumphant haste
To fond Belinda: she with pleasing smile,
Shall greet thy wish'd return: and see! they run,
Thy children run, to claim the destin'd prize.
This in her little fingers pendant holds
The partridge, and admires its beauteous breast,
Like Progne's, with ensanguin'd crimsons stain'd;
That wanton boy bestrides old Sancho's back,
Who of his burden proud, well-pleased, oft licks
His little hand, and whimpering speaks his love.
But now the stated hour of due repast
Approaches: see! what cates Belinda's care,
What grateful viands, for her lord prepares.
For she, though fair, though delicate of frame,
Does not with high-bred modern pride disdain
Domestic cares; the household sceptre she
With pleasure wields; the most becoming sway
Of woman. Here the partridge smoking lies,
Which lately from the wings of wind thy tube
Down struck, and levell'd with the lowly dust.
Nor should thy dogs be absent, but partake
Of their kind master's food: so recompenc'd,
They wish to-morrow's dawn, again thy sport
Grateful shall crown with similar success.

We have given place to the following, only under the consideration that it comes within the description of sporting with serious subjects; a practice which, as it holds up to ridicule, by exhibiting things as they are, may equally please the philosophical, and the facetiously-disposed reader.

THE REFORMING DISPUTANTS,

A Poetical Picture of one of the Oratorical Seminaries, alluded to in "The "Rise and Dissolution of the Infidel "Societies."

By W. HAMILTON REID.

NEAR fam'd Moorfields, where zeal infuriate dwelt,
And self-taught orators strange motions felt,
Some wights polemic, once reserv'd a place,
Disputing ev'n to arguments' disgrace.
For the bible, and for beer, in turn they call,
Till sweat and smoke, and flame, involve them all;
Each pipe now lighted, hear the chairman cry
Proceed to business! time will quickly fly:—
Now for the question;—Is the framer here?—
Pray who proposed it?—Are you serv'd with beer?—
Come, silence there!—to order!—order, Sir!—
'Twas Slug proposed it—then to Slug refer.
And now, again, they paus'd—till turn'd his glass.
The President exclaimed, "Time will soon pass—
No Gemman rise!
The question, Gemmen, we this night discuss
Is, "Whether strangers shall come in with us."
Now two of them a wish to speak express,
And both at once the President address—
To order, Sir! for Slug's upon his legs;
But Slug gives place—he bows, and pardon begs.—

So

So, Mr. President, if you'll permit,
I'll try to give my thoughts a happy hit!
I do not ask that you'd the question read,
I know't by heart, and therefore shall proceed.
But stop—I'm out before I well begin—
What! is there nobody will put me in?—
Now, now I have it—why should we dispense
With folks who have no rule but common sense?
I move the offender be expell'd, nor seek
To the other part of the question to speak.—
Then Bombio rose, with drumming noisy roar,
Who, when oppos'd, has words a copious store—
Calls rogue and rascal, scoundrel, son of whore!
I think, Sir, all are wrong besides myself,
But that this stranger is the silliest elf.
To encourage him would be a lasting shame,
And quite eclipse the rising of our fame—
Zounds! Gemmen, quite forbid it, vote him out,
And then we, only, shall resolve each doubt.
I move, Sir, now, that he be mov'd from hence,
And then he cannot give the weak offence.
So therefore, Sir, before you leave the chair,
I move some articles we hence prepare.
Our brother Snip shall frame, and bring them in
To read next night, before we do begin.
Then Snip arose, and thus elate reply'd,
Since brother Bombio has on me rely'd,
I'll frame such articles shall make you stare,
And Sunday next present them to the chair.
Few words are best, and as I'm rather dry,
As the last speaker said, why so say I—
Next Drazzio rose, a sad perplexing wight,
To know whose meaning takes a writer's night.
I ask, said he, how any man can know
If he wants faith—for sense cannot say so.
But right is right; no more I'll now intrude,
I give my voice the stranger to exclude.
At length a visitor is bade to speak
His sentiments, although they might be weak:
Who thus, "The stranger wrong you all declare,
Unweening how much prejudice you share."
More would he—but rude interruption pour'd—
All cry'd—hear! hear!—Bombio loudest roar'd,
Which waken'd Slug, who at his elbow snor'd:
With mouth half-open'd, and half-clos'd his eyes,
He grop'd about, and empty pot! he cries,
Here waiter, bring another gallon in,
This carnal reason is a damning sin.
But ten o'clock now bade debate respire,
And each vain fool, each vainer fool admire.

MODERN MANORIAL PROCLAMATION VERSIFIED.

From the Bury and Norwich Post, Suffolk.

Liberty. Proclamation. Equality.

WHEREAS people, last season, destroying our Game
Have been guilty of trespasses dreadful to name,
And two qualified persons paid seventy pounds
For a single day's shooting on T*'s grounds;
We, B*, B, R, T, B*,
G*, and W, and M, with consular voice,
Invite our Nobility, Baronets, 'Squires,
Whom the ardour of Game preservation inspires,
At Saxmundham to meet us, subscribe, and combine,
All such daring offenders to punish and fine.
No distinction to make in the measures we frame,
Legal sportsmen and poachers to us are the same,
Lords of Manors alone are the Lords of the Game.
Our liegemen and vassals, who tenant the land,
Shall all trespassers warn, 'tis our will and command,
Our keepers shall menace, assault, and abuse
Those who dare e'en the first verbal warning refuse;
Thus we'll put down small gentlemen just as we please,
And controul the whole country with infinite ease.
That none may plead ignorance, none may complain,
To publish this mild proclamation we deign,
Given under our hands, the first year of our reign.
